

Nasoalveolar Molding (NAM) for Neonatal Cleft Lip & Palate

Presented by Dr Cary Chien
Specialist Orthodontist

Cary obtained his orthodontic specialist qualifications from the University of Melbourne in 2013. This was followed by a full time fellowship in Cleft and Craniofacial Orthodontics at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, Canada, where he conducted research and received further training in management of craniofacial anomalies.

Since returning to Melbourne, Cary has been in private practice in Camberwell and Croydon. He has served on cleft teams at the Monash Hospital, the Royal Children's Hospital and the John Hunter Hospital (NSW). Cary maintains his keen interest for learning and teaching and is a member the teaching staff for the University of Melbourne post-graduate specialist orthodontic program, as well as a staff orthodontist as the Royal Dental Hospital.

Nasal alveolar moulding is a part of cleft lip and palate management which is only possible in the first few months of life. The intention is to reduce the anatomical defect and facilitate optimal surgical repair of the clefts by moulding the newborn hard and soft tissues. It can be a challenging, however ultimately rewarding process for the families and the practitioners involved.
